

and PHS Scholarship Fund and is a member of the Rotary Club of Southwest Wisconsin/Platteville.

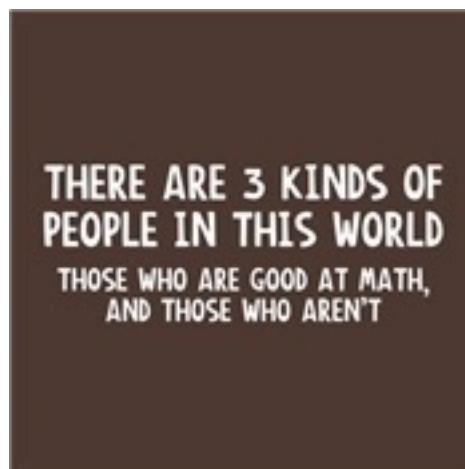

As a grant writer, Angie researches funding possibilities and writes the requests for funding various projects. She also does extensive research on the project itself in order to build a strong case for the Grant Request. As a Freelance Grant writer, she can assist different organizations and groups as needed. Her research is through the internet and different subscriptions that are available. The library is also a valuable resource for researching possible funding. In her research, she tries to match the project with the interest of the company or organization that will perhaps assist with funding the grant. She also touches base with the legislators to keep them informed and to gather additional information on some projects and possible grant possibilities.

Angie stressed that to be a good grant writer, you have to be a good writer with good grammar skills. Proofing your work is a necessity, as is attention to detail. You need to know and follow the guidelines as each grant may have different requests that will need to be met. As she stated, "Read the instructions." She explained to us the many different parts to a grant and the importance to cover all segments of the grant request in order to help in your grant being successful.

Angie has always been interested in non profits and has worked with them in several positions.

A time for questions and answers followed. Angie's presentation was very informative and assured us that her talents are many.

Observation for Today:

Minutes taken and submitted by Eileen Engelke; edited for "Rooster Call" by Charlie Clark.